The holiday-shortened week saw limited trading across most items and species, and the standoff between mills and buyers remains the status quo. It's a little early to feel like the dog days of summer, but the tone is similar. In the West, buyers are leary about the start of fire season and what that could bring to the lumber markets. If you are in need of coverage for a project, it may be smarter to think sooner rather than later. This remains a supply driven market and it looks like that will be the case for quite some time. 30-yr mortgage rates looked like they were trending lower until the war with Iran started. Now that trend has reversed and rates are rising, slowing the potential improvement of single family housing. With demand continuing to be muted, look for supply disruptions to be what triggers any upward market momentum.
